Golden Mukenai (The Age of Bronze) Diana Gainer

Twelve hundred years before our era began, a great city ruled the straits between the Inner Sea (the Aegean) and the Hostile Sea (the Black Sea), controlling the source of the most valuable metal of that age, tin. This was the Age of Bronze, when kings ruled by virtue of marriage to a priestess-queen in Ak'aiwiya (Greece) or by force of arms in the empire of Nashiya (the Hittites) or Mizriya (Egypt). Readers will recognize the source of the legend of Helen of Troy in this tale, but this is not simply Homer's epic retold. This novel also draws on the historical records from Hittite archives, written in cuneiform on clay tablets, from the Egyptian monuments, written in hieroglyphics, from palace records in Linear A and B from Greece and Crete, and correspondence from Canaan. This volume reveals the true tale of the Trojan war...and the sequel will detail its aftermath.
