MEN: Are they the biggest problem in the world? Kay Ulrich

MEN: Are they the Biggest Problem in the World? shows how, by balancing energy fields, we affect personal awareness and relationships, and activate the evolution of human consciousness. We live in a world dominated by the pursuit of financial growth, where technologically-driven ideology intrudes more and more into intimate personal and family relationships. Last century saw rapid change in the global environment, where female qualities of nurturing children and caring for the sick and elderly were generally believed worthless to Communism, Socialism, Free Trade and Capitalism. What is it that is driving this trend? Does progress mean that we must sacrifice the caring values that build compassionate and interconnected societies? This book has answers and offers ways to live a better life to improve the planet as a whole.
